STRATEGY OF THE MONTH

Keep a list of books you want to read!

One of the great things about reading is being able to read about other books that sound interesting. This usually leads to an "I'd love to read that book, but I have to read this book first," moment. The next time this happens, consider recording the name of the interesting book a list, in a note-taking app, or anywhere to help you keep track of your list!

READING CHALLENGE OF THE MONTH

Consider your family values and experiences. Let those values and experiences influence your family reading. If you travel or have extended family overseas, learning about the location through stories can be exciting and meaningful.

~ Fairness ~

A note from Mrs. Steiner

This month we have been working on learning fairness through our character education lessons. The students have learned the difference between equity and equality. At home, you can work on the concept of fairness when situations arise. Next time your child says "That's not fair", take the time to have a conversation about why your child felt that way and if fair means equal. Talk about situations in school, home or the community where the answers may sometimes be "yes" and sometimes "no".
